Poker television programs had been extremely popular, especially in North America and Europe, following the poker boom. This has especially become the case since the invention of the "pocket cam" in 1997 (and its first use in the United States in 2002), which allows viewers at home to see each player's hole cards. However, viewership has been declining dramatically in recent years, due to laws that restricted online play in the United States.

History [edit]

Poker has been appearing on television somewhat regularly since the late-1970s. In the United States, CBS started airing the final table of the World Series of Poker (WSOP) Main Event as an annual one-hour show around this time and later by ESPN, which were casino-produced shows produced under a time-buy arrangement for sports omnibus programming such as the CBS Sports Spectacular. For many years, the coverage was less than robust because viewers at home could not see what cards the players had or follow their progress visually through graphics. Instead, the coverage essentially involved the commentators guessing what cards the players had in a documentary style production.

In 1997, the hole cam, which allows audiences to see the hidden cards that players held in their hands, was introduced in Europe. The hole cam was patented by WSOP bracelet winner Henry Orenstein and first used in the Late Night Poker television series. It was used again in the inaugural Poker Million tournament in 2000 which boasted the attraction of the first £1,000,000 poker game on live television. By 1996, however, the ESPN one-hour highlight show only included hands that were shown down, so that the commentators, including Gabe Kaplan, could comment, in post-production, on the hands while they were being played out. The commentators referred to this as "taking a peek at the cards", and provided the first contemporary announcing on hands during the play in poker history. By 2001, however, Late Night Poker had been cancelled in the UK and televised poker could no longer be found in Europe. In the US, the 1999, 2000, and 2001 World Series of Poker events were only broadcast in one-hour documentaries on the Discovery Networks.

In 1999, documentary filmmaker Steven Lipscomb produced and directed a documentary on the WSOP for the Discovery Channel. It was the first U.S. poker production funded entirely by a television network rather than the casino. When the 1999 WSOP aired, it doubled its audience over the hour time slot. Seeing the audience reaction, Lipscomb believed there was an untapped market and began pitching poker series ideas to cable and network television. Because poker had been on the air for over twenty years, with little viewer interest, broadcasters were unwilling to commit resources to put a series on the air.

In October 2001, Lipscomb wrote a business plan. Along with poker player Mike Sexton and poker business woman Linda Johnson, Lipscomb approached casino mogul and avid poker player, Lyle Berman, whose company Lakes Entertainment agreed to fund the World Poker Tour (WPT)—the first organized and televised tour of poker tournaments in the world.

In June 2002, WPT filmed its first episode at Bellagio in Las Vegas. Wanting to create a compelling, action-packed show, WPT took eight months to edit the first WPT episode. ESPN, who resumed their coverage of the World Series of Poker in 2002, featured pocket cam technology in their return broadcast—albeit, in a very limited capacity—prior to the WPT's first show.

During this time, the “WPT Format” was created featuring the WPT hole cam, interactive graphics and “live sports feel”. These new features put viewers into the minds and at the heart of the action. The first WPT episode aired on March 30, 2003, on the Travel Channel and became an instant success (the highest rated show in network history).

A few months later, ESPN's broadcast of the 2003 World Series of Poker adopted many features characteristic of the emerging WPT series, with an improved graphic display detailing the exciting action of the Main Event's final table. This coupled with the unlikely outcome in the 2003 WSOP Main Event—where Tennessee accountant Chris MoneyMaker won $2.5 million after winning his seat through a $39 PokerStars satellite tournament—and the ensuing publicity only further sparked the already accelerated interest in the game initiated by the WPT.

These events are considered the main contributor to poker's booming popularity—increasing the number of entrants into live poker tournaments (at all levels), the growth of online poker and the overall greater interest in the game—but above all others, the 2003 World Series of Poker Main Event (and subsequent broadcast on ESPN) is most cited as poker's Tipping Point; commonly referred to as the "MoneyMaker Effect".

Poker gained further exposure in Canada and much of the United States as a result of the 2004-05 NHL lockout, which caused sports networks in both countries to air poker as replacement programming for their NHL coverage.[citation needed]

The much improved ratings of poker television programs from this point on led to ESPN covering many more events of the World Series of Poker (in addition to the Main Event as in the past) since 2003, as well as covering some other tournaments outside of the World Series, such as the United States Poker Championship. Since its first broadcast, WPT has also expanded its tour stops from 12 events at seven casino partner locations to 23 domestic and international tournaments and 14 casino partners in Season VI.

Since the introduction of the hole cam and WPT television format, poker has become almost ubiquitous in the US and Europe. While poker originally aired on sports channels such as ESPN and Sky Sports has expanded to such "non traditional" networks as Bravo and GSN. All poker television programs make heavy use of the aforementioned pocket cam and television format, plus generally feature a "straightman" and a "comedian" type of commentators, with one often being a professional poker player.

With the ability to edit a tournament that lasts days into just a few hours, ESPN's World Series of Poker broadcasts generally focus on showing how various star players fared in each event. Key hands from throughout the many days of each year's WSOP Main Event are shown, and similar highly edited coverage of final tables is also provided. For the events in the WSOP before the Main Event, only the final table is covered in television coverage, similar to how the Main Event was televised before ESPN's airing of the 2003 World Series Main Event.

The World Poker Tour does not offer general coverage of the multi-day poker tournaments. Instead, the WPT covers only the action at the final table of each event. With aggressive play and increasing blinds and antes, the important action from a single table can easily be edited into a two-hour episode. Although the tournament fate of fewer stars are chronicled this way, it allows the drama to build more naturally toward the final heads up showdown.

Although 1 most poker shows on television focus on tournaments, High Stakes Poker shows a high-stakes cash game. In this game professional 1 and amateur players play no limit Texas Hold'em with their own money (the minimum to enter the game is R$100,000). 1 This game has allowed spectators to observe differences between cash games and tournaments, and to see how players adjust their 1 play to the different format.[1]

Poker's growth in Europe led to the creation of two FTA channels: The Poker Channel and 1 Pokerzone. Both began broadcasting during 2005.

Televised poker experienced a sudden disruption in 2011 after the lawsuit United States v. Scheinberg 1 et al. was filed. Two of the defendants in that case, PokerStars and Full Tilt Poker, were the primary sponsors 1 of most of the shows that were airing on American television at the time.[2] Since it was discovered that online 1 gambling (other than sports betting) was not illegal and the state law used to file the lawsuit was not applicable 1 to foreign companies, the lawsuit was resolved in 2012, with the two companies merging and without any admission of guilt.

Although 1 once popular, poker television programs have steadily been losing their audience and never fully recovered from the disruption caused by 1 the Scheinberg lawsuit. ESPN is on contract to show World Series of Poker programming through 2024, though viewership has dropped 1 dramatically since the early boom.

The over-the-top content platform PokerGO was launched in 2024 and is based in Las Vegas, Nevada.[3] 1 It is a subscription-based streaming service specializing in poker content including cash games, tournaments, and documentaries.[4] PokerGO streamed the World 1 Series of Poker from 2024 to 2024 in partnership with ESPN, before CBS Sports became the new domestic television partner 1 in 2024.[5]

In December 2024 on YouTube-based Hustler Casino Live, the biggest pot in televised U.S. poker broadcast history was set. 1 The No-Limit Hold'em cash game had stakes of R$200/$400/$800/$1,600 and Alan Keating would win the R$1,158,000 pot with a flush against "Handz".[6]

In 1 February 2024 on PokerGO's No Gamble, No Future Cash of the Titans, Patrik Antonius would win a R$1,978,000 pot with two 1 pair against Eric Persson to break the record set on Hustler Casino Live.[7] Following that record-breaking pot, there were three 1 pots that also amounted to larger than the previous record pot that was set on Hustler Casino Live.[8][9]

Festival PhotoEspaña: una celebración de la {img}grafía en Madrid y más allá

El Festival PhotoEspaña en Madrid se llevará a cabo en septiembre, habiendo presentado más de 80 exhibiciones con el trabajo de nearly 300 fotógrafos y artistas visuales. Las exhibiciones incluyen a figuras establecidas como Elliott Erwitt, Paloma Navares, David Goldblatt y Erwin Olaf, junto con nombres menos conocidos como Lúa Ribeira, Widline Cadet y Consuelo Kanaga.

- Arriba: Narrativas de emancipación, deseo y intimidad de Erwin Olaf en el Centro Cultural Fernan Gomez. Derecha: Visor - Un modo de mirar, de Boris Savelev en la Serrería Belga.

Los lugares y la producción de las exhibiciones son tan impresionantes como la {img}grafía misma. Las imágenes de Erwin Olaf se presentan con un espléndido cuidado en el subterráneo y espacioso Centro Cultural Fernan Gomez; las visiones urbanas de Boris Savelev ocupan la Serrería Belga, un sitio de patrimonio industrial y antigua serrería; y el trabajo de Gonzalo Juanes se exhibe en cuatro pisos que ascienden una torre de agua de 1907. Las impresiones de trabajo de Elliot Erwitt se muestran elegantemente en la Fundación del Canal.

- Casas incompletas, parte de un desarrollo municipal de 1,000 casas inconclusas. La asignación de financiamiento se hizo en 1998 y la construcción comenzó en 2003. Los funcionarios y políticos dieron varias razones para el retraso del proyecto: escasez de agua, robo de materiales, problemas con la eliminación de aguas residuales, problemas causados por el alto contenido de arcilla del suelo y escasez de fondos. Para agosto de 2006, se habían completado 420 casas, Lady Grey, Cabo Oriental, Sudáfrica, 5 de agosto de 2006. {img}grafía: El Fideicomiso del Patrimonio de David Goldblatt.

El trabajo del sudafricano David Goldblatt se presenta en una encuesta magistral en la Fundación Mapfre, construyendo un alegato tranquilamente devastador contra el apartheid. El estatus de Goldblatt como hombre blanco sin duda abrió puertas que de otro modo habrían permanecido firmemente cerradas, pero también su aspiración a la objetividad, honestidad y imparcialidad incluso mientras documentaba las crueldades, absurdidades y atrocidades de la estructura social de su país, donde incluso el entorno construido podía ser expresivo de las "necesidades, concepciones, anhelos y temores de quienes las construyeron" y las "creencias vitales y las ideologías sobre las que aquí se basaron las vidas".

A lo largo de su obra mantuvo una actitud de distancia y aparente imparcialidad, testimonio de su creencia de que "mi propio sentimiento era que si quisieras ser fotógrafo - en Sudáfrica, desde luego - tenías que poder mirar las cosas a distancia de brazo."
