The new Labour government of the United Kingdom promised to end an "era of politics as performance" in the ceremonial speech of the King, announcing a broad agenda that addresses housing construction, crime and illegal immigration and deals with a loss of confidence that was exposed during the general elections in the country.

In a grand event that brings the pomp of the British monarchy and the political class, King Charles III officially opened a new parliament reading the plans of his new prime minister, Keir Starmer, whose victory in the recent elections closed a 14-year era of conservative government.

The plans were centered on the unibet 1 promise of "national renewal" by Starmer and included a promise to nationalize the railways of the United Kingdom and address a housing crisis by changing the laws of planning to build more affordable homes.

Starmer also made serious promises to combat illegal immigration and, more generally, to deliver a blow to the conservative governments that ruled the United Kingdom since 2010 and the surge of populism that spread across the United Kingdom and Europe.

"The era of politics as performance and self-interest above service is closed", declared Starmer unibet 1 an introduction to the plan, which includes 40 new laws that his government will seek to pass. "The fight for confidence is the battle that defines our political era."

His agenda covers the center of the British political spectrum that Starmer sought to reclaim, selling to the public pragmatism and including elaborate measures to please both older and younger generations. "The seductive charm of populism may sound attractive, but it leads us to a dead end without exit and the greatest disappointment", wrote Starmer.

Nevertheless, although the speech has clarified much of the vision of growth that Starmer defended during the election campaign in the summer, the question of how quickly the British can expect to see an impulse for their public services remains.

Política e pompa colidem

The opening of parliament is a rare collision of politics and pomp, involving a series of traditions and conventions of centuries that surprise even many of the members of the United Kingdom.

The production began when King Charles III and unibet 1 wife, Camilla, traveled by carriage from the Palace of Buckingham to the Houses of Parliament, before the MPs were summoned by the Black Rod – a role established in the 1300s – to attend his speech in the Chamber of Lords.

Starmer and his defeated opponent, the conservative leader Rishi Sunak, shared a heated conversation before and after the speech, their roles dramatically reversed after the July 4 elections that saw Labour win a
